THE JOURNAL OF INCLUSIVE SCHOLARSHIP AND PEDAGOGY

CALL FOR SUBMISSIONS

All Topics Welcome (Vol. 27, No. 2)

Deadline: May 31, 2017

Jason Martinek, Guest Editor

Transformations: The Journal of Inclusive Scholarship and Pedagogy opens the gates for this issue to pedagogy-related articles on all topics. Transformations is a peer-reviewed journal which invites college teachers to take pedagogy seriously as a topic of scholarly articles. It is an interdisciplinary forum for pedagogical scholarship exploring intersections of identities, power, and social justice.

Submissions should explore strategies for teaching in the classroom and in non-traditional spaces (such as the media and public discourse). We welcome jargon-free essays from all disciplinary and interdisciplinary perspectives. We seek articles (5,000-10,000 words) and short essays for the "Methods and Texts" section (1500-3000 words).

Topics may revisit themes of past Transformations issues (Teaching Community, Teaching and Religion, Teaching Popular Culture, Teaching Food, Teaching Feelings, Teaching Digital Media, and Teaching Sex) or may include:

- The politics of teaching
- The role of internationalization, globalization, transnationalism in teaching
- The politics of education
- Teaching social justice and/as activism
- Changing relationships between K-12 and the university
- The status of interdisciplinary programs and teaching
- Teaching in historical perspective
- Teaching and gender, sexuality, and race
- Educating communities
- Connections between classrooms and communities
- Reflections on change in literary canons or historical periodization
- How "de-professionalization" affects teaching: reliance on adjunct faculty, student debt, etc.
- Changing relationships between and status of teaching and research
- Technology in teaching
- Teaching controversies
- The statuses of STEM, STEAM, and the humanities
